My first job was hodding at Lightmoor - a working height of eighteen inches - on my hands and knees. The leather straps bit into my shoulders. and when I got wum my shoulders and knees were raw, My feyther said 'you want o bathe them in the water from the pot' With pee, y'know - that did the trick.

This page will serve as a roll call for as many of the miners who lost their lives in the coal mines of the Forest of Dean as can be fitted onto the page. The preceding page featuring the memorial for Forest miners will be printed on vellum so that the miners names show through.

Notes.

My intention is that the pages of this book will be printed on double sided paper with the exception of the last image which will be printed on vellum. I am still considering the best option for covering the book and adding titles. I also need to make a final decision about the quotations I use and also the fonts.

The final page will be used for acknowledgements.
